Craig grew up on a farm in Medina County and currently lives in a restored 1834 Western Reserve home near Lodi, Ohio. Art has been a pursuit of Craig's his entire life. He studied at Kent State and the University of Akron as well as working with many artists over the years. He is a nationally known railroad artist and local landscape painter. He has illustrated books published by his father Al, on the New York Central, Pennsylvania and New Haven railroad, painted in the style of the "golden Age" of illustration, the first half of the 20th century. The farm life and rural roots are also a heavy influence on Craig's art. He loves depicting nature and historic settings. Craig works primarily in oil paint and is a devoted practitioner of the "Plein Air" method of painting. That is where you take your easel on location and create a painting in one session.

Taylor's main form of painting is painting nature landscapes in black and white.

Sarah Ingraham

"An inspiration to everyone who knows her, she continues to take and teach art classes, to exercise daily, to volunteer where she's needed and to enjoy her life. Sarah Jane and fellow artist Elaine Lamb started Mud Mothers pottery studio in Medina's Victorian Village in 1975. According to Bob Hyde's Beyond the Storefronts website, "Lamb and a friend, Sarah Jane Ingraham, were both mothers of young children and were both drawn to the delights of turning mud into beautiful pots." Sarah Jane later decided that "it didn't seem the best form of art for me," so she left the business to pursue other art forms, especially watercolor painting."

Laurie Musser

ChalkboardStudio.com

As a child, Laurie would sit in front of the chalkboard her mother gave her and draw for hours until there were mounds of chalk dust on the floor. Paper wasn't readily available. Following graduation from The Art Institute of Pittsburgh, PA she moved from her home town in Butler, PA to Ohio. She spent the next twenty years plus as an illustrator on staff at American Greetings and raising her family. Those precious years provided her the knowledge and experience she now relies on to explore new horizons in her own studio, appropriately named CHALKBOARD STUDIO located in Strongsville, Ohio. The title of ILLUSTRATOR DESIGNER is one in which she is most proud. It provides the opportunity to express her wide range of interests. Her styles are as varied as her interests, from cute children's books to masculine textile design, from decorative floral motifs to contemporary moving graphics. The industry tends to put artists in a box. Resisting this, Laurie continues to explore new territories with her work.

Kathy Stokes-Shafer

Kathyartlandscape.com

Kathy has a bachelor of Fine Arts Degree from Moore College of Art and a Landscape Design Degree from Temple University. She is a Certified Member of the Association of Professional Landscape Designers. She has expanded her creative talent by taking up painting. It is her belief that all creative endeavors use the same design principles whether it is cooking, architecture or dance. Kathy explores these design principles through her paintings. Many of her paintings are inspired by images seen on trips.
